

CareCircle

A care companion for older people and patients with chronic conditions. Patients choose what to share with family members and carers; their choices appear in the GP consent view.

This is not one patient.

EXTRAPOLATED

And GPs spend about 35,000 hours every working day managing results. EXTRAPOLATED

12m × 47% × 12 months = 67.7m. 74 min per GP a day (Poon 2004) × 28,426 full-time GPs (NHS England, July 2026) = 35,059 hours. Full working and caveats in the notes.

All patient data synthetic · Fictional demo, not an official NHS product

Results go nowhere, then aren't understood, then the family is locked out.

01

Blind to the trend

Each result is read on its own. Nobody reads the trend.

02

No proof she was told

The record never says whether she was told.
Nothing chases it.

🔒 03

Numbers, not meaning

The App shows a number and says ring your GP.
Her family sees nothing.

CareCircle turns every result into the right explanation and next action for every trusted person, under the patient's control.

1. Sees it coming

Reads the whole trend, not one result.

2. Tells her first

Nothing reaches the family until she has been told and says yes.

3. Tells the right people the right way

Daughter gets the numbers. Husband gets the lift to arrange. Son gets a yes or no.

What happens to Eleanor now.

TODAY

- Four low white cell counts since May, each filed on its own.
- A result lands in the record. Nobody knows if she has been told.
- Her family knows nothing. She is the messenger.
- Nobody follows up. Nothing chases it.

WITH CARECIRCLE

- The trend is flagged as worsening the second time, in July, not filed a fourth time.
- The result is held. The practice talks her through it. She says yes.
- Grace gets the numbers. Idris gets the lift to arrange. Thomas gets “nothing needed this week”.
- Three days with no confirmation: a GP task is raised and her landline rings.
